Course information

Course prerequisites

The course is for students who are in the preparation or editing phase of their master's thesis from all areas of health research (policy, economics, law, management, innovation, and medicine, etc.).

Learning objectives

The course consists of three sessions, each of which requires students to present the current status of their master's thesis. Firstly, the students are asked to present their own content and to develop it further based on subsequent discussions. In addition, they can give critical and constructive feedback on the research results or approaches of others. After attending the course, participating students can present the content developed in the context of their thesis to a professional audience.

Course content

The students present parts and questions from their final thesis. These contributions may, of course, have different degrees of maturity; both initial research questions and already advanced manuscripts can be presented. Both for the presenters and for the other participants, conscientious preparation of the dates is obligatory and contributes significantly to the success of this format.

Course structure and indications of the learning and teaching design

The course will be offered on three dates throughout the semester.

Course literature

The course literature will be announced depending on the composition of the topics.
